New era of coordinated attacks on foundations of fundamental rights, our new report finds

Released on 18 February, ILGA-Europe's 'Annual Review of the Human Right Situation of LGBTI People in Europe and Central Asia' warns of a new era in which rising anti-LGBTI legislation threatens fundamental rights.

Governments are fueling anti-LGBTI sentiment to push laws that restrict freedom of expression, association, and fair elections.

"What begins as an attack on LGBTI rights rapidly grows into a wider assault on the rights and freedoms of all individuals in society. This is not just an LGBTI issue; it is a crisis for human rights and democracy as a whole."

Chaber, ILGA-Europe's Executive Director

New judgement on Russia's failure to protect the privacy of personal data

The European Court of Human Rights made a judgment in the case of Bazhenov and Others v. Russia, which found a violation of the right to private life. The ruling highlights the failure of Russian authorities to respond adequately to the non-consensual sharing of the applicants' private data—including their sexual orientation—by private individuals on social networks.
