Queer resistances against racism and homonationalism

“Queer theory is a movement for social justice that is all-inclusive. In Arabic it translates into shazz, deviant. I love the word shazz! It is in being deviant that we resist all the unfair distribution of power in the world today”. (BareedMista3jil, Meem)

In these last years the activists of Maurice (a Turin lgbtq cultural center) have been working on the intersection between queer politics, racism, homonationalism as well as observing with interest the experiences of LGBT movements in the Mediterranean area. Together with the activist of CIAO (a self-organizing political group of migrants living in Turin) they would like to invite other activists living in the European countries and in other countries making part of the Mediterranean area with the aim of creating a moment of exchange and networking on these issues.
